PROTECTIVE ORDER

The United States of America has moved for an order governing the disclosure and handling of discovery materials in this case.

IT IS ORDERED, that:

The Attorney for the Defendant shall maintain custody of all discovery materials provided by the Government until such time as those materials are returned to the custody of the Government. The Attorney for the Defendant may copy any materials as necessary to effectively represent their client; however, the Attorney for the Defendant shall not provide copies to their client or others, except that the Attorney may provide copies to employees or agents of the Attorney as necessary in the representation of the Defendant. Any such employees or agents are subject to all restrictions outlined in this Order.

The Attorney for the Defendant may allow the Defendant to review the discovery materials, but shall not release custody of those materials to the Defendant, and shall safeguard against the release of those materials.

Under no circumstances are discovery materials to be released into the jails. The Attorney for the Defendant may allow the Defendant to review discovery materials at the jail while in the presence of the Attorney or an agent of the Attorney; however, the Attorney/agent must retrieve such material prior to the end of the visit with the Defendant.

IT IS SO ORDERED.
